Yes

- The he did well because the feast that the father puts on is not a reward
- The son's reward is his father's acceptance of his son's repentance
- The father's expression of joy
- This was a perfectly normal (human) emotion
- We are taught to always forgive anyone who wrongs us with no exception

NO

- That gave the impression that the younger so was better than the elder good son
- The celebration would encourage him that he can puss everything and then say I am sorry and he'll get abig party and welcomed back with open arms and that would get on and on
- The Father should have appreciated the elder brother for always being good and at home
- The Father overjoyed too much and that was not necessary
- How sure was the Father that the younger son was not going to change unless he is forced to
- The father should have set some rules
- Forgiving does not mean than that you have to rollover and let them walk on you
- He did not do well because of the statement which says that all that is mine is yours meaning that the Father was robbing from his obedient son to reward or celebrate toe Prodigal Son for wasting his share
